Phil:

I'm hoping that you are indeed available to go through the next version of the assessment and provide a critical review. My apologies that the review cycle last time was rushed and not all of your suggested edits were captured. I'll try to do better next time.

Our current schedule calls for the delivery of all draft chapters to our esteemed editors by December 21. From there, we hope to have revised individual draft chapters back out to specific authors for comment by January 11, and then any further edits back to the editors by January 18. The completed full draft of the revised assessment will be ready January 25 and we are asking for comments from the team by January 29. Yes, January will be busy!

It would be very helpful if you could be available up to December 21 and then again from January 11 on. That way, you can provide input on your own chapter, and any other chapter as needed by Glenn and Kate.

Does that work for you?

Jeff,

I think there is an important role for me in reviewing the full document. That role is to check many of the details to ensure they are stated correctly. I offered some edits last time around that if accepted might have avoided a few criticisms, but time was short. I am not sure where that review fits in. Are you, Kate and Glenn planning time off between Christmas and New Years. Or will this be the time that you are assembling the pieces you got on Dec. 21?

If you are assembling the parts then my role would likely come next. No?

Non-Responsive

I would appreciate knowing if you think that your Bristol Bay responsibilities may impact your use of use or lose leave. That said, I emphasize that this should be worked out with your first line supervisor.
